

I am opposed to private ownership of the media. The public has the constitutional right to hear all sides of an issue. With private ownership important news could be suppressed - a good example is I heard of this issue, not through TV or radio, but through the internet; therefore we need to maintain public ownership of the media in order to stay informed. I do condemn the efforts of the media conglomerates not only to buy control of what is public domain, but to keep it as quiet as possible; and the FAA, a government agency who is supposed to represent the people's interests and safety being a party to this. An appointed head of the FAA has the moral responsibility to represent the ones to whom FAA belongs, not those who appointed him/her no matter the political pressure or clout.
